Mysore: Youths must concentrate on the growth of institutions besides building their career so that India scales greater heights, said entrepreneur and MindTree chairman Subroto Bagchi here on Friday. He also highlighted the need for institutions to provide quality education.

Addressing the students of Sri Dharmasthala Manjunatheshwara Institute for Management Development during its 19th convocation, he said: "Many youths think that their responsibility ends with building a career for themselves. But they must understand that the onus of ensuring the growth of their institutions also rests with them. Students must involve in the development activities of their institutions."

Sharing his success stories, Bagchi said: "Empathy plays a significant role in one's life than one's qualification. "To be a successful human being, one needs to be emphatic towards others and society," he said.

"Many highly-qualified people living in cities usually bother about their positions and family. They do not bother about others," he claimed, adding: "There will be ups and downs in life. We need to deal with them confidently."

Secretary of SDM Educational Trust, Ujire S Prabhakar, said that India has made big strides in the fields of science, technology and engineering, "but still, some sections of people are deprived of economic and social benefits. Youths must try and bring them to mainstream".

Five students were honoured with gold medals for their excellence in specialization and overall performance. Varun Kumar received three gold medals.

On the occasion, 180 PG diploma management students of batch 2012-2014 were awarded, while those specialized in marketing, finance, HR, operations and systems received certificates.
